

Battalion commanders at war

Type de contenu : Texte

Type de médiation : sans médiation

Titre(s) : Battalion commanders at war : U.S. Army tactical leadership in the Mediterranean theater, 1942-1943 / Steven Thomas Barry

Auteur(s) : Barry, Steven Thomas

Editeur, producteur : Lawrence (Kan.) : University press of Kansas, cop. 2013

Description matérielle : 1 vol. (X-258 p.) : ill., cartes, graph. ; 24 cm

Collection : Modern war studies

ISBN : 978-0-7006-1899-6
0-7006-1899-6

EAN : 9780700618996 rel.

Appartient à la collection : Modern war studies 2691-9508

Autre variante du titre : [U.S. Army tactical leadership in the Mediterranean theater, 1942-1943.]

Classification décimale Dewey : 940.541 273

Note sur les bibliographies et les index : Bibliogr. p. 239-252. Notes bibliogr. Index

Note sur le contenu : West Point evolution A new approach in the classroom Forging cadets into soldiers: tactical training Into the gym and onto the fields Role models Forging leaders beyond the Hudson Regular Army training The Civilian Conservation Corps and New Deal impacts The Thomason Act diversifies The next step : Army service schools The Army General Headquarters maneuvers Wading in with Torch The Western Task Force arrives in Morocco Mixed results : elite units at Oran Waters at the Torch landings The Big Red One at Oran The training of one division: 1st Armored Division The Eastern Assault Force at Algiers The race for Tunisia Battalion leadership in the fight for Chouigui Pass Medjez el Bab : indicators of weak leadership The struggle to coordinate at Longstop Hill Evaluating armored warfare data A long February in the Tunisian passes Marooned infantrymen: the 168th committed by the II Corps Hightower, leadership traits, and defeat at Faid Pass Alger, overwhelming numbers, and the defeat at Sidi Bou Zid Stopping the bleeding at Kasserine A greenless spring to end Tunisia Operational leadership challenges From el Guettar to Matuer: the infantry divisions put it all together Howze, battle plays, and the breakthrough at Mateur Cole and the issue of greenness The last first battle, Sicily Thunderbirds rising : building learning organizations prior to combat Rock of the Marne overcoming friction at Licata The Fighting First at Gela Paratroopers in action against armor Conclusion

Historiography essay

Résumé ou extrait : La jaquette indique : "Most histories of the U.S. Army in World War II view the Mediterranean Theater of Operations primarily as a deadly training ground for very green forces, where lessons learned on beaches of Oran, in hills of the Kasserine Pass area, and at the collapse of the Tunis bridgehead all contributed to later success in Western Europe. Steven Barry, however, contends that victory in the MTO would not have materialized without the leadership of battalion-level commanders. They operated at a high level, despite the lack of combat experience for themselves and their troops, ineffective leadership at higher levels, and deficiencies in equipment, organization, and mobilization. Barry portrays these officers as highly trained, adaptable, and courageous in their first combat experiences in North Africa and Sicily. Their leadership, he argues, brought discipline, maturity, experience, and ability to translate common operational guidance into tactical reality, and thus contributed significantly to battlefield success in North Africa and Sicily in 1942-943. He examines their prewar experiences, including professional military education and unit training exercises; personal factors such as calmness and physical resilience under fire; and ability to draw upon doctrine, creatively apply resources at their disposal, and clearly define and communicate mission goals and means. He also reveals how battalion leaders incorporated technological innovations into combined arms maneuvers by employing tank capabilities and close air support doctrine. As Barry's assessment shows, these battalion commanders were not the sole reason for the Allied triumph in North Africa and Sicily, but victory would not have been possible without the special brand of military leadership they exhibited throughout those campaigns. Under their leadership, even inexperienced units were able to deliver credible combat performance, and without the regular army battalion leaders, U.S. units could not have functioned tactically early in the war. One of the few studies to focus on tactical adaptation at the battalion level in conventional warfare, Barry's book attests to the pivotal value of professional military education, and makes an important contribution to today's "organizational learning" debate, while providing an in-depth view of adaptation of U.S. infantry and armored forces in 1942-1943."

Sujet - Collectivité : États-Unis Army. États-Unis Army. -- Officiers -- 1939-1945 (Guerre mondiale) -- Officiers -- Exercices militaires -- 1939-1945 (Guerre mondiale)

Sujet - Nom commun : Guerre mondiale (1939-1945) -- Campagnes et batailles -- Méditerranée (région) Guerre mondiale (1939-1945) -- Opérations militaires -- Afrique du Nord
Commandement des troupes -- 1900-1945
Leadership -- États-Unis
Tactique -- 1900-1945
Opérations combinées (science militaire) -- 1900-1945