Résumé ou extrait : "We live in an era of exponential technological acceleration which is transforming how wars are waged. Today, the battlespace is transparent; multi-domain sensors can see anything, and long-range precision fire can target everything that is observed. Autonomous weapons can be unleashed into the battlespace and attack any target from above, hitting the weakest point of tanks and armored vehicles. War now develops at hyper-speed, risking operational, informational, and organizational paralysis induced by the rapid convergence of key disrupters in the battlespace... This book examines lessons discovered from recent wars, including the conflict in Ukraine, to provide answers to these difficult questions and more." (4e de couv.)
