Résumé ou extrait : Présentation de l'éditeur : "Environmentalism and Global International Society show how environmental ideas have transformed the normative structure of international relations. Falkner argues that the norm of environmental stewardship has become a universally accepted primary institution of international society. The book traces the long history of environmentalism's rise from a loose set of ideas originating in the nineteenth century to redefining international legitimacy and international society's global responsibilities by the late twentieth century. It demonstrates how this deep norm change came about as a result of the interaction between non-state and state actors, and how the new environmental norm has interacted with the existing primary institutions of global international society, most notably sovereignty and territoriality, diplomacy, international law and the market. The book shifts the attention in the study of global environmental politics from its presentist focus to the longue durée of the gradual greening of international relations."
