Résumé ou extrait : In 1916 Britain was forced to introduce universal conscription to replace the terrible casualties suffered by the pre-war Regulars, the Territorials and the unprepared volunteers of the 'New Armies'. In 1917 and 1918 the vastly expanded British Expeditionary Force became the most effective of all the combatant armies in France, with improved weapons and tactics forged in the Somme and the Ypres Salient. Shaken but resilient under Germany's last desperate offensive in spring 1918, it swept forward to final victory. This second of three titles charts the British Army's changing appearance in colourful detail. Source du résumé : quatrième de couverture de l'ouvrage.
