Résumé ou extrait : A silent war is fracturing our world—and it's not being fought with bombs or bullets, but with algorithms, trade routes, propaganda, and chips. As tensions escalate between the United States and China, a new kind of cold war is reshaping everything: from the flow of goods and data to the very beliefs that hold nations—and people—together. This is not just a geopolitical rivalry. It's a deep psychological and cultural schism that's forcing countries, corporations, and individuals to choose sides in a divided reality. In this urgent and eye-opening work, you'll discover how global power is being redefined through US-China cold war tactics, ideological warfare, digital cold war dynamics, and the slow unravelling of shared truth. Explore the hidden architecture of conflict : – How decoupling the global economy is transforming supply chains into battlegrounds. – Why South China Sea conflict analysis reveals more about the future than the past. – How Huawei tech ban explained isn't just about tech—it's about sovereignty and narrative. – What the TikTok ban China USA debate exposes about algorithmic identity wars. – Why the future of AI in geopolitics may decide who gets to define reality itself. For policymakers, business leaders, students of international affairs, and globally curious citizens, this book offers a rare third lens—one that goes beyond fear, nationalism, or bias to reveal the deeper forces shaping our shared future. Whether you're seeking clarity on the new world order 2025, or simply trying to understand the emotional and strategic stakes of geopolitical fragmentation, this is the definitive guide to the battle not just between nations—but between worldviews.
