Résumé ou extrait : "Second Lieutenant Stuart Hills of the Nottinghamshire Sherwood Rangers Yeomanry embarked his Sherman DD tank on to a Landing Craft Tanks on the afternoon of Sunday 4 June 1944. A tank commander at only 20, unblooded, fresh from public school, army training and then Sandhurst, his was a sudden transition from the order and security of Tonbridge, cricket, boxing and rugby to a real war. When he landed on Gold beach - a day late, and from a rubber dinghy, his tank having sunk between LCT and shore the day before - he was faced by two tanks 'brewed up' on the beach, their crews dead inside. But he was not to be deterred; he was young, fit and ready for anything." "This is his account of tank warfare, spearheading an invasion into fiercely held enemy territory, where every gain usually came at terrible cost."-- 4ème de couverture
