Résumé ou extrait : Although Britain's greatest commitment of land forces was on the Western Front, British, Empire and Dominion troops also fought in other theatres of operations - and in some cases continued to fight there after the Armistice had ended hostilities in the West. The last in a three-part series, this describes these far-flung campaigns, in Italy, the Balkans, the Middle east, several parts of Africa, Russia, China, and even the North-West Frontier in India. This text is illustrated with contemporary photographs, and with meticulous colour plates of British, African, Indian and Australian troops, in the uniforms and with the equipment used on battle fronts from the desert sands to the snows of north Russia.
