Résumé ou extrait : On april 1982 argentina invaded the falkans islands. The british response was swift, some said foolhardy. Within forty-eight hours a royal navy battle group, under the command of rear adm. sandy Woodward, was dispatched for the falkands, eight thousand miles away. One hundred days later, the admiral returned to british shores victorious. All told, a hundred British ships and twenty six thousand men had been involved in the conflict. This is the frontline story of that battle related by the commander of the british task force. At times reflective and frank, at other times revealing the steely logic of a brilliant military tactician, it takes the reader right into the heart of the fighting.
